PROFILE

Having graduated in 1989 from Nottingham in England with a Degree in Civil Engineering, Richard joined a blue chip UK based civil engineering and building contractor (Birse Construction Ltd) to learn and develop his civil engineering and site management skills.

Following successful application, he relocated to Hong Kong in 1993 to join Leighton Contractors Asia where he complimented the local site management team bringing to the table western construction practices and quality management procedures on the new printing facility for the South China Morning Post in Tai Po, New territories.

Richard then spent 2 years with Aoki Corporation on the HK airport core program flagship project Central Station before moving to Malaysia where he joined a major local group (Hong Leong Bhd) to project manage a land mark high rise development on the outskirts of Kuala Lumpur.

The down turn in Asia in the late 1990's provided an opportunity to relocate to the Middle East where Richard joined Shell International where he project managed two critical multi-million USD residential building projects in the interior oil fields of Oman. Following successful completion of the projects, Richard was promoted to manage a prestigious residential development for Shell International on Sakhalin Island, Far East Russia.

Richard relocated to Dubai in 2004 and stepped out of the construction industry to become "service provider", establishing with his partner the construction focused recruitment consultancy called Connect Middle East.

For the past 5 years, Connect Middle East has been supporting contractors and consultants in finding high caliber engineering and management candidates for their growing operations throughout the Middle East and more recently the Far East and has developed and enviable reputation for recruiting "the right person for the right position at the right time".
